

one Democrat speak after two Republicans in a row. But we have a distinguished friend on the other side, Senator GRASSLEY from Iowa, who wishes to speak. I now yield so that the Senator can use some of his time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield myself 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to engage the Senator from North Dakota because I want to make my remarks and run to a meeting that I have to have. But I want to make this point in his presence, and we can argue about it at a later time. What he said I am not going to say is inaccurate because he has the documentation for what he said. But he spoke about our document and our claim of a balanced budget as being a fraud on the American people. We can accept that judgment if he is willing to say that if we had the President's document as a final document before this body to pass as the budget resolution for this year, with the claim that the President balanced it in the year 2005, which is 3 years longer than ours, the Senator from North Dakota would have to say that the President's budget is a fraud on the American people, because the document that we have before this body, that we correctly claim will balance the budget by the year 2002, uses exactly the same accounting procedure that has been used in this body by both Republicans and by Democrats when they were in the majority. It would also be used by the President of the United States in saying he had a balanced budget.

The President would use the same approach that we used. The fact of the matter is that our document is not a fraud. Our document balances the budget by the year 2002. And except for the fact that the President of the United States uses OMB numbers instead of CBO projections for the future, I would have to say that the President balances the budget by the year 2005. Therefore, the President's document is not a fraud and our document is not a fraud.

I hope that if the Senator from North Dakota is going to say that the way we do business and account for the balance is a fraud, he would be willing to say that the way the President of the United States did it as well was fraudulent. But the fact is that we are balancing the budget. We are balancing the budget because the United States people have finally sent a very clear message to the Congress of the United States that it is morally wrong for this generation to live high on the hog and to let our children and grandchildren pick up the bill.

Now, most of the debate behind the desire to have a balanced budget in this body is going to be based solely upon the public policy that it is good economics to have a balanced budget. And

I agree with those statements. But I think that the main reason we should balance the budget is because for one generation we had anything we want through the Federal budget because of the bottomless pit of borrowing and that is not right. I do not believe it was ever right.

Obviously, it got into the thinking of public servants that there was nothing wrong with one generation living off future generations.

We are finally going to be able to put our house in order so that after the year 2002, we are going to be able to pay our own way. Then future generations can have a better life. They will not be saddled with the high interest and the high debt. If we did not change business as usual in this country on fiscal policy, future generations would be facing tax rates in the high 80 percent to pay for the debt that we have loaded on them.

If any Member wonders whether or not we can have a great future without borrowing to the extent to which we borrow, $4.9 trillion, just think, for the first 165-year history of our country, except for the years you classify as war years, our forefathers were able to show surpluses in budgets of the Federal Government 3 out of 4 years.

So the economic philosophy that has come to dominate public policymaking in Washington, DC, that somehow we had to have a deficit to have prosperity, that does not square with the practice of our forefathers who lived within their income and still built a strong, viable economy and a society that was strong.

The moral arguments for this budget are very, very strong, I think the overriding reason for victory that the balanced budget brings.

One other comment that is somewhat a reaction to what has been said on the other side of the aisle about the tax cuts, most importantly about the hogwash of the tax cuts going to the wealthy. I think they express those points of view because there is not an appreciation of what $500 per child in the pockets of middle-class Americans can do for the families of America and what it can do for the economy.

Maybe there is not an appreciation by the limousine liberals of America of what $500 means to a family because the philosophy on the other side of the aisle, quite frankly, is that somehow all the resources of this country belong to the Government, that we let, somehow out of the goodness of our heart, a certain amount of money be given by the Government to the families.

That is all wrong. Everything belongs to the families and the workers of America. Under our constitutional system, people might give up some of their resources to Government through taxes to exercise certain functions that can be done by Government for the good of all of society.

In the last 30 or 40 years, the concept of tax expenditures has crept into our policymaking here in Washington. We say that the deduction for children is a tax expenditure. We say that the tax deduction for interest on home mortgage is a tax expenditure. We say this or that which you can subtract from your income tax is a tax expenditure.

Well, a tax expenditure implies that Government owns all the resources of this Nation and we might expend some of the money back to the families to keep.

We can complain about high taxes and $500 tax credits for families on the other side of the aisle very easily when you start with the concept that every penny made by the working families of America in this country belongs to the Government and Government is going to let the families keep something. That turns good reasoning on its head.

We, on this side of the aisle, accept the premise that all the resources of this country belong to the families and the workers of America and that we, Government, ought to only take from those families what is legitimately needed to exercise the legitimate functions of Government.

That is why on the other side of the aisle they can make light of and maybe even make fun of a $500 tax credit per child.

I want to commend the chairman of the Budget Committee for his hard work in reaching this budget compromise. I want to say it this way so the American people out there, cynical about one person any place in American society maybe can make a difference—and I believe one person can make a difference. I believe that any one person, any place, regardless of their station in American life, can make a difference if they want to. Our society and our system of government allows that to happen. And each person that says they cannot make a difference belittles their contributions that they can make and underestimates their contribution that they can make to American society.

That is true in this body, as well. One person can sometimes make a difference. I think that Senator PETE DOMENICI's desire to have a sound fiscal policy for this country and to work to a balanced budget has made a difference, just because of the single individual of Senator DOMENICI. I think I can hold him up as an example, when people are cynical about an individual in Congress making a difference, that we are going to have a balanced budget in the year 2002 because of 1 person out of 535 in this Congress. Maybe I ought to say at least of the 100 Members of the Senate, because Senator DOMENICI of New Mexico, chairman of the Budget Committee, made a difference.

I suppose, as the Senator from Washington said about an hour ago, everybody cannot have everything that they want in a balanced budget. You can have everything you want when you can borrow unlimited amounts of money to pay for it. But the principle of a balanced budget, for the first time
